

Jennifer Nuk

Jennifer Nuk is a genetic counsellor and clinical coordinator with the BC Cancer Hereditary Cancer Program and clinical assistant professor with University of British Columbia's Faculty of Medicine Department of Medical Genetics. Current interests include integrating the evolving landscape of hereditary cancer genetic testing in to contemporary service delivery models, enhancing public and health care provider education, advancing health care quality and increasing access to inclusive genetic services for underserved and diverse populations.

Jennifer Nuk is a genetic counsellor and clinical coordinator with the BC Cancer Hereditary Cancer Program and clinical assistant professor with University of British Columbia's Faculty of Medicine Department of Medical Genetics. Current interests include integrating the evolving landscape of hereditary cancer genetic testing in to contemporary service delivery models, enhancing public and health care provider education, advancing health care quality and increasing access to inclusive genetic services for underserved and diverse populations.