

Rachel Butler

Rachel completed her BSc at the University of Victoria (UVic) and her MSc in genetic counselling at the University of British Columbia (UBC). Rachel has experience in a vast array of genetic specialties. After graduation, she worked at Maritime Medical Genetics Service in Halifax as the prenatal and metabolic point person. She then worked at the UBC Clinic for Alzheimer Disease and Related Disorders, and at Genesis Fertility before joining Olive Fertility Centre when it opened in 2013. Rachel is both Canadian and American-Board Certified and is a Clinical Instructor at UBC. She served on the Canadian Genetic Counselling Certification Committee and has participated in numerous research projects that have been presented at international meetings and published in peer-reviewed journals.

Rachel is passionate about working in the fertility genetics field. She knows that fertility can be stressful for patients and is dedicated to supporting patients through their fertility journey and navigating genetic testing options.
